USD HOLDING WOMEN'S CLINIC

By Elyse Brightman
For the Plain Talk

A lot of women like to watch football, but very few, if any, are able to see how a college team prepares for Saturday games.

To help understand the game, The University of South Dakota (USD) is holding a women's clinic for a little insight.

"It's a way for our players and coaches to be able to reach out to some of the female fan base," said Luke Groth, director of football operations. "It's a way for them to come and get a little hands on with Coyote football and be around our coaching staff, ask questions and come and have fun."

The Coyotes will host the clinic on Friday night in the DakotaDome from 5:30-8:45 p.m. It's open to any interested women.

"We show (participants) around the dome a little bit, we get in the weight room," said Groth. "(Last year) we had some of (the players) working out in there and showing (the participants) some of the things we do on a daily basis. We had an equipment presentation last year, talked about some of the protective pads - helmet, shoulder pads and some of the pads guys wear underneath the jersey."

This will be the second year for the women's clinic. Last year it attracted 75 participants.

Head coach Joe Glenn and the coaching staff take the women through position drills, including running through bags and cones to how to take a hand-off. Coaches also use classrooms to teach football basics including positioning and offensive and defensive philosophy.

"We're teaching people who don't know a thing about football all the way up to people who have been watching football their whole life," Groth said.

Head strength and conditioning coach Jevon Bowman will show a presentation in the weight room and put participants through a mock work-out.

Many of the players attend the clinic and help run the drills, demonstrating what the team does when people aren't there to watch.

"We give insight on how we get ready to workout, how we warm up and then we walk through some things," said sophomore offensive lineman Sam McLeran. "We come down on the field and we have different groups of drills, like we have some quarterback stuff, some defensive stuff, (offensive) line stuff, and we rotate through. We have some fun with it."

The clinic is an opportunity for players and coaches to interact with fans in a casual, fun setting.

Junior offensive lineman Niles Banks says it's fun to see the reaction of the women while they learn something new and to answer any questions they might have.

Participants are asked to wear casual clothes and tennis shoes since physical participation is encouraged though not required. More information about the clinic can be found at http://tinyurl.com/usdclinic.

The night concludes with a post-clinic social at Howler's Bar and Grill with coaches and players.

"There's room for everybody to be a coyote," said McLeran.
