South Dakota Magazine features the USD's green efforts

Take a political science course from Rich Braunstein and you'll notice a shortage of paper handouts. It's one way the Vermillion school is trying to reduce its carbon footprint and is featured in South Dakota Magazine's annual Guide to Higher Education, included in the new January/February 2012

This year the special section explores how South Dakota's colleges, universities, technical schools and tribal colleges are becoming more environmentally friendly. At the University of South Dakota, it's about reducing paper usage across campus and encouraging walking or bicycling to and from campus

South Dakota Magazine features Vermillion's ethnic eateries

Capital News Today

Research was never so delicious for the writers of South Dakota Magazine. The Yankton staff hit the road and sampled cuisine from around the world, but never crossed the state line. Their report on the interesting ethnic restaurants they discovered around South Dakota is included in the new January/February 2012 issue.

An especially tasty route winds through Vermillion. There, the writers found authentic Asian food at Silk Road Café and Chae's. The magazine's guide introduces readers not only to the delicious dishes, but to their creators, and the unique stories they share about how they arrived in South Dakota from countries spread around the globe.
