counselor for four years, said "I am here to spread my science knowledge and share it with the children. That's the reason I keep coming back every year. It's a lot of fun." Dr Barb Goodman, director and principal investigator of SD BRIN/INBRE said, "The camp is in honor of E.O and John Lawrence, USD alums, who contributed to science by winning a Nobel Prize in Physics (E.O.) and being the "Father of Nuclear-Medicine (John)." Kiana Cabrera, 12, from Jane Adams (Joliet, IL) school said, "I never used to like science. But it's really fun. I really liked building robots. We also learned why older people lose their vision. Before coming to the camp, I couldn't have imagined that the older people lose their vision because their eyeballs get stiffer. I also liked going to the Wellness Center." Hannah Doohen, 14, who was at the camp for the third time this year said, "It's my last year. It is fun and I hope that USD does it again next year for more kids because it's a really good opportunity and a great learning experience." Seventh grader Jack Padmore, 12, from East Middle School, Sioux City, IA, said, "It's great to have kids know about science. The camp also gives us an opportunity to meet new people. Some students have roommates and it's fun being around them and learn from one another." Another East Middle School student from Sioux City, Liam Parry, 11 said, "All the instructions help us learn about science. It's fun. We also went to movies and the Wellness Center." The kids were housed in the residence halls at the USD and were provided daily meals.

"We knew we weren't going to cover the costs in one year," Herbster said. "It was going to have to be a three-year period." Another athletic project nearing completion, Herbster said, is a new basketball court. The new court was being painted with the new Coyote logo and other emblems last week and ships to Vermillion this week. "It should be ready by the end of July, but once we get it in here and get it set up, the company will have to show us how to put it together and store it," said Herbster, who added that the goal is to have the court ready for the start of football camp and the other fall sports teams reporting. During the last 10 years, the Dome has received its share of facelifts. A new $13 million steel roof was constructed in 2001, during which the football team played home games in Yankton and Sioux Falls. In 2004, upgrades included a new Daktronics video board, concourse and concession improvements, renovations to women's locker room and press box updates. In 2007, the sports medicine area was renovated, men's locker rooms were replaced, the equipment room was reconstructed and a new arena floor was installed. Also in 2007, construction began on the Coyote Landing VIP area on the north side of the Dome, overlooking the northeast corner of the football field.

experienced in Sioux Falls was 92, while Sioux City showed 94. "If you look at the history books, it shows that typically this time of year is when we have our warmest days of the year, so this is not unheard of," Heitkamp said. "This is not something that has never happened before. I think a lot of people think it's something new just because the memory isn't as good - we only remember what happened in the past couple years as opposed to the past 20 years," he said. Heitkamp encouraged people to use "basic common sense" in dealing with the extreme temperatures. "Drink plenty of water, make sure they take plenty of breaks, remain in the shade or in the house, check on the elderly and be aware of the very young. Those are the two age groups most susceptible to extreme heat," he said. He also reminded residents that going to the pool will be their best chance at combating the heat. "That will cool the surface of the skin, but it doesn't cool the inner core body temperature at all," Heitkamp said. "So, if you stay in the pool all day long, a person could just as easily have heat exhaustion or heat stroke as they do working outside." By the end of the week, the jet stream related to the heat wave will have begun to move east, bringing its high temperatures to the coast. However, this may not spell long-term relief for Vermillion residents. As of press time, the NWS data indicated area temperatures could stay near the upper 80s to low 90s through Monday at least. charge is a Class 6 felony, said State's Attorney Teddi Gertsema. Kyte, 61, also has been charged with Killing or Injuring Animal of Another, a Class 1 misdemeanor. Under South Dakota law, Kyte could face up to two years imprisonment in the state penitentiary, a fine of $5,000 or both for the felony, and one year imprisonment in the county jail, a $2,000 fine or both for the misdemeanor. Kyte allegedly beat the German shorthair pointer - whose name was Shy - to death in its kennel late last month. He is free after posting $500 bond. According to the Associated Press, Shayne and Kim Ludwig said their dog was gentle and barked only if someone was trespassing on their property. - The Associated Press contributed to this report.
