knowledge, but also applying it to real life situations, and learning how to think critically with the knowledge, how to solve problems with it, how to write about it that shows critical thinking in the writing.”
 “These changes have been supported by research and are promoted by a number of professional organizations,” said Sam Gingerich, system vice president for academic affairs. “While each of our universities is in varying stages of implementation, plans generally call for redesigned elementary education programs to come online at all institutions next year, followed by secondary and K-12 programs a year later.”
 The curriculum redesign geared toward Common Core Standards, Warner said, will also include changes in teacher assessments that will steer away from multiple choice testing and demand that students “show their work and how they solved a problem. Those are exactly the skills that modern society calls on people to possess, and the ones who possess them will do well in the future, and the ones who don’t, and the countries who don’t, will fall behind.”
 The goal is to achieve this redesign with the parameters of the 120 credit-hour standard for most bachelor degree programs. A meeting is planned in early August to bring university faculty from math, science, social science and English together to align disciplinary and professional requirements within the 120 credit hours, taking into consideration a year-long residency component.

to extinguish it and then have to call us.”
 Draper said he hopes safety is the biggest takeaway from the class.
 “Don’t let the fire get between you and your exit,” he said. “If you do have a fire, it’s more important to get out, to notify the fire department than engaging the fire with the amenities as they spend family time together on July 4.

 “This is something that we (the VCDC board members) have been talking about for some time,” Howe said, “and it received some discussion last year, about whether to continue having this get-together in the park.
 Planners of the event have watched local participation dwindle over the years.
 “We talked it over last year, about the possibility of canceling it,” Howe said. “Over the years, attendance has continued to diminish and the costs have continued to rise. We just weren’t getting a lot of participation from the community, whether it be in attendance, or in volunteers wanting to help out, and it really wasn’t something that our member businesses were really taking advantage of.”
 The board concluded that the VCDC’s staffing and financial resources would be better spent on projects that better aligned with the organization’s mission of growing the community’s economic base and expanding the local marketplace.

In working with K-12 schools to develop this new model. Gingerich said most of those schools so far have been located close to a university campus. In order to bring this concept to more schools, discussions are under way about creating regional “hubs” where multiple campuses could place students in year-long residencies.
 “Given South Dakota’s geography, there are large regions of this state that rarely have student teacher placements and the related professional development benefits these interactions with campuses provide,” Gingerich said.
 “To do a year-long residency, you have to have some sort of regional presence and regional support for the student teacher,” Warner said. A statewide work group is currently developing details concerning the number of hubs that are needed and where they should be located.
 “That’s a particular challenge in South Dakota because of the number of rural systems that we have, and we want them to be part of the experience, too,” he said. “That’s a challenge in a whole lot of different ways.”
 This planned redesign will not require any significant new funding.
 “I don’t believe that the financial model will require (funding from) a school district, except that it’s in the interest of a school district to be able to hold on to a promising teacher,” Warner said, “so what they get is a look much more intensively at teachers who will come to teach at their school.
 “The financial model supports itself; it doesn’t require any more credits than are currently required of students, and I think there are some fees that are associated with student teaching that would extend to that additional semester, but beyond that it’s not a big financial impact,” he said.

extinguisher. That is the one thing that I really try to get across.
 “Yes, these individuals (who took the class) now know how to discharge an extinguisher and put out a small fire, but this is contained. This is training,” he said. “Even a kitchen fire ... spreads so quickly. You need to get the children out, make sure everyone’s out of the house, and call us. Things can be replaced. People can’t.”
 People interested in scheduling fire extinguisher training can contact the Vermillion Fire Department at 677-7097.

“Some of the vendors who were coming were out-of-town vendors,” Howe said. “It just didn’t really sit right that a Chamber of Commerce event is relying on out-of-town businesses to participate. But if we didn’t invite those out-of-town vendors, the offerings at the event would be really limited.”
 The VCDC did contact service groups in the community to see if they would be willing to take a leadership role or provide assistance in offering a community July 4 program.
 “We hoped to get broader-based community involvement in the event, and we just weren’t able to, for the same reasons that we were really struggling,” Howe said. “It’s hard to get volunteers on the Fourth of July, and for non-profit organizations, they had to determine how to fund such an activity.
 “We just couldn’t align with anyone who was willing to participate with us on it, so we really had to make the hard decision, even though we’d really like to see this event continue, to decide that it’s something that we just couldn’t do by ourselves any longer,” he said. “It was a very difficult decision, but this activity had turned into something that just wasn’t sustainable.”
 Vermillion’s traditional fireworks display will be held at dusk July 4.

Public comment sought on state geographic names

The South Dakota Board on Geographic Names (SDBGN) is seeking public comment on whether the word “Negro” is offensive in names of geographic features.
 Current legislation directs the SDBGN to rename any features with the word “Negro” in the name.
 A number of comments that have already been received indicate that the individuals and organization representatives do not find the word offensive. Based on those public comments, SDBGN is seeking additional input from the public regarding the use of the word “Negro” as a part of a name for geographic features in the state.
 Please share any comments regarding whether the word “Negro” is offensive as a part of a name for a geographic feature. Please also submit any historical, ethnic or cultural information regarding this issue.

 Based on the public input received, the SDBGN will discuss at their August board meeting whether the features that currently have “Negro” in their name are to be renamed or whether the issue needs to be brought to the South Dakota Legislature for further consideration.
 Comments should be submitted no later than August 1, 2013. Submit comments to:

Mowing of the state right-of-way

The South Dakota Department of Transportation reminds landowners that mowing of the right of way may not begin east of the Missouri River before July 10.
 Mowing of the right of way in Gregory, Lyman and Tripp counties could begin on June 15.
 If a person who is not the abutting landowner wishes to mow the interstate highway right of way, he must apply for a permit and include a waiver signed by the abutting landowner.
 Contact information for the region engineer is available on the DOT Web site at <http://sddot.com/contact/>.
 The Permit to Occupy the Right of Way application is located on the DOT Web site at <http://sddot.com/resources/forms/>.
 The department may mow medians and areas within the rights of way prior to July 10 to control noxious weeds and provide increased safety to the traveling public.
