It is the first state tourney trip for Miller since 1993 but the school's sixth overall.

Vermillion, too, is making its sixth trip to state in school history, and it is the sixth time 12 seasons the Tanagers have qualified. VHS was second in 2000, returned in 2001, placed third in 2005, went back again in 2006 and won it all at Spearfish in 2007.

Kelly Amundson explained what going to state means to her and her team. "The whole team has put in a lot of hard work over the years and over the summers," she said. "Making it to state makes all the extra practice worth it." She said the Tanagers' biggest strength is their teamwork and that "every one of us is a threat!"

Szymonski echoed those sentiments, adding, "We play so well together, selfless and cohesively. We trust each other and believe in the team and our potential.

She said the girls "push one another to be better" in practices. "Every day we are getting better, stronger and smarter as individual players and as a team. We love the game, but we love our teammates just as much. We are going to make the most of our last minutes on the court together."

seriously be a potential employer, and hopefully give them enough of a background that the employer will invest in them to do some onthe-job training," Howe said.

When the students conclude their coursework they can then go out to potential employers, such as Masaba, and take a welding test.

"We haven't gotten the feedback on how they did with some of that employer testing, so once we get that ... we'll be able to find out what the status of those students was," Howe said. "If we have to revamp the class, we will

A course such as this one plays an important role in Vermillion's changing economic landscape,

Robinson, one of five Tanager seniors along with Szymonski, Amundson, Bailey Carlson and Lexi Regnerus, concurred that teamwork and communication are the team's finest points. "We would give up our lowerpercentage shot to give our teammate a high-percentage shot," she said. "We communicate so well. On the court you hear all five players talking. Even on the bench you hear the rest of the team talking and encouraging. It is so awesome to have a team that is confident in you!"

Regnerus noted that, going into this year, "we knew that it was our last chance to do something special and end the season in Spearfish, so we kind of buckled down and got the job done, I guess." She said she and her mates know each of them has her own role on the team and "we each play that role to the best of our ability for the good of the

The concept of teamwork that the Tanagers have grasped was also stressed by Mackenzie Huber. "On any given night anyone could have the top score, and each of us is happy to have the assist or screen." She said there is no pettiness, "and we have little drama for a group of girls who spend so much time together!"

Echoing her community's sentiments, Josie Huber said this is an opportunity "we will cherish for a long time. I love this team and everyone on it!"

Howe said.

'Vermillion has not had a tradition of the skilled trades," he said. "As we are recruiting these businesses and helping the existing ones grow, we're at a disadvantage with our workforce. We just don't have the skilled trades-people necessary to meet their needs."

Howe added that it's heartening to see different groups working together to help meet those needs.

"It means that this community is taking an active role in getting the workforce that they need so they can continue to grow in Vermillion," he said. "It's a real positive when we have these different entities working together to do this."

The city should hear within 30 to 45 days of applying whether it will receive the grant, Howe said.

City agrees to drainage study

The Vermillion City Council voted to contract S.E.H., Inc., of Sioux Falls to complete a drainage study budgeted at $70,000.

The action was taken at the council's regular meeting Monday night.

City Engineer Jose Dominguez said that despite the budgeted-for amount, the actual study will cost less.

"This study will be hopefully coming in for $51,000, which is what the contract amount is for," Dominguez said. "The end result of the drainage study will be to provide the city with a capital improvement plan for drainage improvements in certain areas of the city."

The proposal had been discussed at the council's last regular meeting, which took place Feb. 21.

At that time, Dominguez said the study would divide the city into storage basins, and each basin would be surveyed for some time into the future.

One of the major areas of focus will be land that is slated for future development, including the ground north of Main Street and west of Crawford Road.

They study also will look at the city's existing drainage policy to make sure it's "not being too strict or too lax," Dominguez said at

According to a memo provided this week to the city council members, after two drainage areas are inventoried and modeled, a capital improvement plan will be provided to complete the modeling of remaining basins.

A further capital improvement plan will be provided to construct drainage improvements within the two drainage basins modeled.

The city also will be supplied with an implementation strategy which will be used to locate funding for the improvements and "also define triggers that will require the construction of a drainage improvement," the memo said.

The discussion was tabled Feb. 21 until discussions with S.E.H. could be completed. Dominguez said at this week's meeting that the company took exceptions with two items on the contract: The multiplier the consultant was willing to charge the city, and also when invoice were due, and what type of interest would be charged to the city if it was delinquent in payments.

"As for the multiplier, we're going to keep (it) in there, as that's what the consultant pays his overhead with, and so forth," Dominguez

In terms of the interest rate, "we're going to be utilizing the state statute that sets the interest rate maximum as far as how it's going to be paid," he added.

S.E.H. was one of eight consultants that provided proposals to the city.

"We decide on these consultants based not only on monetary (amounts) and experience, but on expertise in the area," explained Council Vice-President Howard Willson.

The council voted unanimously to award the contract to S.E.H.

Hesse visited Cafè Brulè to discuss wedding cakes over the lunch hour, and tried some of the regular menu items.

"He was so impressed he offered to do a dinner event here," Iverson said. "We thought that was wonderful. He mentioned he would like to include charities, and we were super-excited because we were good friends with (DVSOS director) Sandie Sullivan and very supportive of her charity.

"It was kind of a no-brainer," she said. "We thought it would be a lot of fun, and it would be for a great cause. We all love food, so it was a win-win for everyone."

"It's a very worthwhile charity," Waters added. Hesse and Waters set to work planning the meal, which turned into a six-course feast of Southern

The first course consisted of a BBQ short rib pizza, while the second was a spinach salad.

The third course was a she crab corn chowder.

The fourth course was a "twochef, one-plate duel" that consisted of seared diver scallops and a beef

The fifth and main course was "whiskey piggy" - a whole grain mustard grilled center cut pork loin, with bourbon-glazed pink lady apples, truffle-crusted mac 'n' cheese and pork belly greens.

"That was really popular," Waters said.

The final course was a dessert of "three southern belles" – a mini red velvet whoopee pie, a bourbon tartlet and a bananas foster shooter.

"It was different than we normally do on our menu, and it was something that Executive Chef Robert was excited about doing," Iverson said. "It wasn't fried chicken and cole slaw, it was a really elegant Southern meal. It was wonderful."

A total of about 140 people partook in the meal, which was served to them in two groups at 5:30 p.m. and 8 p.m.

"We flipped the restaurant in seven minutes," Waters said. "We got everybody out, and we got it re-set and ready to go in seven minutes. It was amazing. It went fantastic."

"It was better than we could have planned," Iverson added. "We tried to plan things and time things out, and actually we were able to. We were hoping to have more time to flip, but we didn't."

Waters agreed, saying, "People were enjoying themselves. They would probably like to have sat there another hour, but there was another hungry crowd."

Apart from the $75-per-ticket price that diners paid, a number of vendors also helped out with donations toward DVSOS, Waters
