

USD Wellness Center cited for outstanding innovation

Recreation Management, the number-one fitness, sports and recreation information resource for recreation, sports and facility managers, names the USD Wellness Center in its 10th annual Innovative Architecture & Design Awards.

Featured in the magazine's May 2012 issue, the Wellness Center scores its highest marks based on its appearance from the outside and the originality of the design. The magazine praises the facility's "use of materials" and declares that "the dramatic and welcoming entrance invites students to come inside and have some fun." The abundance of natural light and skillful use of materials, color and details are also highlights of the building's overall design, according to Recreation Management.

"This is great recognition for an outstanding facility," said Jeff Baylor, vice president of marketing, enrollment and student services. "The Wellness Center deserves praise for its unique and innovative design, but also for its impact on student success and for contributing to a healthy and vibrant community."

Designed by RDG Planning & Design out of Des Moines, IA, and built by the Henry Carlson Company of Sioux Falls, the 61,000 square-foot Wellness Center opened Jan. 17, 2011, and serves as a recreation hub for USD students and the city of Vermillion.

The Wellness Center, completed at a cost of $15 million, is home to USD intramural sports, and features racquetball courts, courts for basketball and volleyball, a climbing wall that stands 38-feet tall, and fitness studios for aerobics, Pilates and yoga. State-of-the-art workout equipment includes everything from exercise bicycles and elliptical machines to a large weight room filled with treadmills and strength training equipment.

PLUNGE

These temperatures were often registered instantly on the faces of those who chose to jump into the water, and then scrambled as fast as they could to the other side of the tank.

Many of the participants seemed to be trying to keep as much of their bodies out of the water as possible.

"Just for the record, if you don't get your hair wet, you have to do it again," Miller joked.

To be on the safe side, two rescue divers - Glen and Terry Nelson - were stationed in the tank at all times. Dr. Roy Mortensen also was on hand in case of emergencies.

Not all the plungers had to withstand the excessive cold - one of the first events of the day was the "kiddie plunge," which featured children 5 years old and younger sliding into a wading pool filled with warm water.

Like their adult counterparts, many of the children were outfitted in elaborate costumes.

Among the more imaginative costumes were a duo of 3 Musketeers candy bars, the Cat in the Hat, Thing 1 and Thing 2, punk-rockers, and rock, paper, scissors.

"Everybody loves to see the jumpers dressed up," Law said. "It just brings people out to see the crazy costumes. ... It's always interesting in terms of what you're going to find."

One of the more interesting costumes was the one worn by Dan Bell, a CA from the fourth floor of the Olson dormitory: A wedding dress, complete with veil and bouquet.

Bell's outfit was chosen by a vote of the people on his floor. He said he had narrowed down three costumes - The Joker, Scorpion from Mortal Kombat or a Spartan - and was searching for a fourth.

"I asked my friends, and they were like, 'Wedding dress.' The wedding dress was just a suggestion, and sure enough, it won."

The vote margin was "overwhelming," he added.

"As soon as I released the polls and people started voting, I started calling around saying, 'Hey, I have a feeling the wedding dress was going to win,'" he said. "I was trying to call my family and see if they could find me a wedding dress, but not after I asked my sister if I could use hers."

Instead, Bell's sister found him a dress at a consignment store, who gave it to her for free when she told them its destination.

Bell went on to win the "I Can't Believe You Wore That!"

Costume award.

Although Sunday wasn't as warm as the days that preceded it, Law said it was on par with one of the previous plunges.

"The first year we had, it was beautiful. We had really nice weather," she said. "Last year was a lot like this - overcast, cloudy and it even rained a little. This year we thought we were going to luck out and it was going to be really warm."

Cool weather or not, the plunge attracted more participation and raised more money than ever before.

Law said she hopes they can keep that record going.

"It just keeps getting bigger," she said.
