Vermillion Plain Talk 5A Senators Give Final OK for River Basin Districts

By Bob Mercer

State Capitol Bureau

PIERRE – Legislation that creates a new system for water management in South Dakota, with local boards to be elected from nine major river basins, received final approval Wednesday from the state Senate.

The next stop for SB 2 is the desk of Gov. Dennis Daugaard. He is expected to sign it into law, according to Sen. Jason Frerichs, D-Wilmot.

Frerichs served as the primary spokesman in the Senate for the MERCER plan, which was developed by the Legislature's watershed task force that has met the past three years.

House Republican leader Brian Gosch of Rapid City chaired the task force. Two of the panel's proposals have been passed by the Legislature this year.

The other is SB 3 creating a new state program offering voluntary mediation services in drainage disputes.

OBITUARIES

Sen. Mike Vehle, R-Mitchell, was the primary Senate spokesman for the mediation plan. Gosch was the lead House sponsor for both measures. Frerichs asked senators to agree with a House amendment on the riverbasin districts plan.

"It's taken the entire session, literally, to work through this," Frerichs said.

The legislation calls for an oversight panel and a pilot project. The project will be in the Red River

Frerichs said there would be a need to work the Minnesota and North Dakota on the project. He acknowledged there remains some hesitation among legislators about the plan. But no one has offered a better alternative, he said.

Vehle spoke in support. No one spoke against it. The final tally was 28-6 in favor.

Voting against it were Republicans Corey Brown of Gettysburg, Bob Ewing of Spearfish, Ried Holien of Watertown, Dan Lederman of Dakota Dunes, David Novstrup of Aberdeen and Bill Van Gerpen of Tyndall.
