National Match Day

By Shauna Marlette For the Press & Dakotan

For University of South Dakota medical students completing their medical training in May, Friday was not just the last day of the

It was Match Day. During a ceremony held at the Avera Sacred Heart Pavilion, each of the 10 medical students completing their education in Yankton found out where they would be serving their residencies. National Match Day occurs on the third Friday of March each year at each of the 155 medical schools in the United States. Fourthyear medical students are given the results of the National Resident Matching Program telling them where they will serve their residencies.

According to Lori Hansen, the Yankton campus Dean for the USD's Sanford School of Medicine, Match Day is a big deal for students in medical education, second only to the day they were accepted to medical school.

"It is the day when they find out which program and which specialty they have matched for their residency program," she said. "This is where they will be spending their next 3-5 years finishing their medical education."

A lengthy process, Match Day is in reality nearly a year in the making.

"The process actually begins in the fall when the students decide which specialty they want to enter and where they would like to go for their residency training," Hansen said. "Then they set up interviews and receive information on whether they are granted interviews at the institution or program. Then the students put in a ranking of the programs where they would like to go to complete their residency program. The programs also put in their rank list. It goes into a computer and then, today, they find out how the computer matched them." Senior medical students usually begin the application process at the beginning of the fourth year of medical school. Programs review applications and invite selected candidates for interviews held between October and February. After the interview period is over, students submit a "rank-order list" to a centralized matching service. At the same time, residency programs submit a list of their preferred applicants in rank order to this same service. The process is blind, so neither applicant nor program will see each other's list placement is a complete surprise.

It is a process and some students don't match," Hansen said. "Those students found out on Monday. So, they had this week to find a spot. Those students know where they are going. But for most students, it is a total surprise. (During the Match Day ceremony,) we will call them up to the podium, hand them a letter and they will go sit with their family. All of the students will open their envelopes at the same time. So it is very emotion filled."

Hansen said that each year, there are 10-14 medical students who complete their training in Yankton.

"This group of, very soon, future physicians have been a great group to work with," she said. "We have been very fortunate. They have a good knowledge base. They are very skilled in the art of medicine and have learned professionalism. We have really enjoyed having them here and hope to see some of them back in the Yankton community being physicians.'
