Kapilow marveled at how examples of instruments from so many disparate eras and locations could be held in the same collection. “Music is kind of a rage to express,” he said. “Every culture has this incredible need to express itself, and somehow the museum has it all. . . .”
“To have it all ricocheting off each other makes this museum one of the most unique places in the world,” he said.
During the performance, Kapilow went over the Archduke Trio movement by movement to demonstrate how it was put together, and what makes it so effective to the listener.
Following a brief intermission, the Rawlins Piano Trio played the piece all the way through, without interruption.
Kapilow said he has done similar performances of more than 200 other full-length pieces live, and an additional 160 shorter pieces on NPR, ranging from classical to pop tunes.

crash, but sustained fatal injuries. Robertson was wearing a seatbelt and sustained minor injuries during the crash.
Buchanan and Halldorson were not wearing seatbelts. Buchanan was treated and released from the hospital. Halldorson sustained serious but non-life threatening injuries.
The South Dakota Highway Patrol is investigating. Clay County Sheriff’s Office, Beresford Police Department, South Dakota Department of Transportation, Beresford Fire Department, Lincoln County Sheriff’s Office and Yankton County Sheriff’s Office assisted.

He thanked the Rawlins Trio for their participation. “They’re a perfect meter-less team,” he said. “The key to it is listening. Even though they do look at each other, what’s wonderful about it is, it’s really listening. It’s also moment by moment listening.”
The performers can never be 100 percent sure about what’s going to happen, and have to adjust their playing accordingly based on what the others do.
“That’s one of the wonderful things about live performance,” Kapilow said. “It can never be duplicated. It’s one time only.”
“Because we’ve had so many recordings, we live in an era where interpretations are frozen, (and) we tend to think of music as a rock in the hand, like it’s a fixed thing,” he said. “I prefer to think of it like a Tibetan sand painting. In other words, you make a painting, and it dissolves as soon as you make it.”
The Rawlins Piano Trio consists of Susan Keith Gray (piano), Marie-Elaine Gagnon (cello) and Eunho Kim (violin).
