The Great Thanksgiving Compromise

By Paula Damon

If you were keeping a list of what to serve for Thanksgiving dinner, you would probably include some tried and true recipes passed down through many generations.

I don't know about you, but my Thanksgiving dinner list seems to grow exponentially each day as we inch closer to Turkey Day.

To be perfectly honest, sometimes I get overwhelmed by the thought of all of that food.

There's stuff I look forward to all year, like the sage stuffing, turkey, gravy and pumpkin pie, gotta have that pumpkin pie.

And then there's stuff I really don't want, dishes I could do without, like baked beans, green bean casserole and sweet potatoes.

I guess since it's Thanksgiving, we have a tendency to overdo.

Funny how that works. Must be we all need to put on a big spread to show how thankful we are.

Will we really be able to eat all of that food?

Take, for instance, our brood of 12. That includes our three youngest grandchildren, who are all picky eaters. At their ages, they could care less about family favorites. All they seem to want are gummy snacks, juice boxes and French fries. Come to think of it, I probably should make French fries for Thanksgiving this year.

Here's another thing that overwhelms me: short-notice add-ons to the menu.

I love my husband and all, but between you and me, he's the king of last-minute suggestions. Right when I'm just about ready to serve, he's always coming up with something more.

I'm not sure where he gets the idea that this is ok.

One year he wanted to add corn pudding at the last. The next year it was rice pudding. Another year, bread pudding. I guess you could say he's a pudding kind of guy.

On most holidays, he wants his good old baked beans. I don't even like baked beans, but he does and that's all that matters, I guess.

On Thanksgiving Day, most people are happy to have Stouffer's stuffing, Butterball turkey, Fareway gravy mix and Ore-Ida mashed potatoes.

But at our house, practically everything is made from scratch. I understand homemade generally tastes better, but there are some advantages to taking shortcuts, like time and effort.

My job in recent years has been to nip my husband's behavior in the bud by sitting down with him, getting the menu on paper and then sticking to it.

Unfortunately, this only seems to work some of the time because I don't want to spoil the holiday by arguing over food.

I see in the Hy-Vee insert a full-course Thanksgiving spread with a variety of choices for the main course, sides and pies. Someone else does all the cooking and you sit back and watch them deliver it to your door.

For $69.95 you get the turkey, three sides, four cups of turkey gravy and a dozen dinner rolls. Or you can order a meal that serves four, including boneless turkey breast, three sides, two cups of gravy and six dinner rolls. That cost $39.95.

I wonder if they do dishes, too?

I doubt Hy-Vee left anyone out of their Thanksgiving dinner delivery, except maybe vegetarians. They have a boneless ham dinner for eight, an oven-roasted prime rib dinner for eight at $119.95 and a gourmet holiday feast that feeds up to 20 for $200.

I turned the page to the pies and discovered they had 10 varieties, too many to list here.

If you don't like pie, you can order cookies.

I doubt I'd ever go so far as to order out our Thanksgiving.

Although, I admit I am tempted.

Besides, does every holiday dinner have to be home-cooked?

I don't think so. Consider the benefits: less time cooking and more time with family.

I may not always understand everything about my husband. While I admire everything he stands for, there is at least one thing that divides us. He can't get enough of the Thanksgiving dinner and I'm ok with less. A lot less.
