

Smart Budget Travel Tips for That Dream Vacation

(StatePoint) Dream vacations come in all shapes and sizes. For some, it may be visiting every ballpark nationwide. For others, it's island hopping in the Caribbean.

Yet nearly three-quarters of Americans haven't taken their dream vacation because they think it's too expensive, according to a recent Bank of America survey. But dream vacations don't have to be out of reach. Ted Allen, travel expert and Food

Network host, has teamed with Bank of America to provide smart budget travel tips:

- Monitor airfare and hotel rates a few months out to potentially save hundreds of dollars on last minute price surges. Travel during off-peak times to stretch your budget and avoid crowds.

- Use a credit card that rewards you for purchases made throughout the year. "My BankAmericard Travel Rewards credit card earns an unlimited 1.5 points per dollar on all purchases, and since my points don't expire I can save them up to offset future travel expenses," says Allen. "And it's great when I travel overseas because there are no foreign transaction fees."

- Establishing a personal connection with travel representatives helps open doors for hidden upgrades and deals. For example, with one phone call you may be able to check a bag for free.

Don't defer your dream vacation forever. Simple tips can make your dream a reality.

USD Ranked Among Best Colleges For Veterans

University of South Dakota has been ranked 135 among the best colleges for veterans by College Factual (www.collegefactual.com), a trusted resource that uses customizable tools and outcomes-based rankings systems to guide students through the college selection process.

A number of factors important to veterans were used to determine the ranking. Some important data points are how affordable the school is to veterans, the size of the veteran population at the school, whether the school accepts ACE credits and offers flexible learning options, and availability of veteran resources such as a veteran's office on campus.

The ranking also includes important quality metrics such as graduation and retention rates, reported earnings of graduates, the percentage of full-time teachers, and the average student loan default rate.

In addition to University of South Dakota's placement in Best Colleges for Veterans Overall, the institution also ranks highly for veterans in General Psychology, earning a 95 spot out of 875. The institution also is ranked 145 out of 827 for veterans in Biology, General.

You can see all of the school's rankings at <http://www.collegefactual.com/colleges/university-of-south-dakota/rankings/badges/>.

College Factual's ranking system is based on a series of algorithms that include information from the Department of Education, nationally mandated data reporting for institutions, Veterans Affairs, and Payscale.

Loving the Porcupine: The Role of Developmental Trauma and Attachment in Older Child Adoption

What: Public Talk, free admission
When: Tuesday Nov. 24, 6:30 pm
Where: St. Paul's Episcopal Church, 10 Linden St., Vermillion

Phil and Mary Reed (not their real names) had a beautiful home, full of love and opportunities for learning. Eight-year old Charlie had a lifetime of feeling like a suitcase, being passed from place to place. He knew how to blend in to new places, and the Reeds knew how to be good parents. Everybody knew that it was the best thing ever when the Reeds decided to adopt Charlie – everybody, that is, except Charlie.

After years of struggle, Mary Reed knew a breakthrough had occurred when Charlie spoke three little words to her. Not, "I love you," which he'd repeated without conviction from the beginning, but something more honest. Charlie said, "I feel sick." Then, he threw up.

Attachment is the kind of love that children reserve for people whom they trust to take care of them, especially when they don't feel clever or attractive. It's the kind of love that we want around us when we feel sick or sad, and it's the faith in one certain someone to make us feel almost magically better.

Attachment is the "golden ring" in older child adoption: the prize that every adoptive parent longs for, and that every adopted child like Charlie finds hard to give. The child's Attachment to caregivers is the foundation for reaching adulthood safely, and for becoming a secure and productive member of the family and community. But children like Charlie often experience traumas in their very early life, beginning before birth and continuing through infancy and early childhood. These experiences can compromise and challenge their ability to form true Attachments when they finally meet their adoptive family.

Dr. Patterson is the author of Hunter, Faith and the Ancestors: An adoption story of courage and belonging. She will be speaking on her forthcoming book, Loving the Porcupine: The Role of Developmental Trauma and Attachment in Older Child Adoption, at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Vermillion, on Tuesday Nov. 24 at 6:30 pm. This is a free presentation that offers crucial insights for adoptive and foster parents, social workers, child and family therapists, and especially students of social work, psychology, education and child development.
