I would do. I spent quite a few weekends choreographing songs and putting them together, but most of our cleaning and teaching and learning happened during morning practice and that first period class."

Swanson watched as her enthusiasm for the sport became contagious to the rest of the team and the underclassmen mirrored her excitement. Though she was a captain, Swanson, and the rest of the upperclassmen, knew the best way to have a successful team was to simply lead by example.

"I'm not exactly sure how to put it because it's almost something you can't exactly explain in words," Swanson said. "I fell in love with this game, sport, whatever you want to call it, like I hadn't really fallen in love with something before. I think that all the other girls could tell how passionate I was about it and that kind of rubbed off on them."

The color guard team at VHS traveled to a handful of competitions during the season, where this year's squad was very successful under Swanson's direction. "We do parades and we do a field competition," she said. The team competed in two parades, including Wayne State where they won "Best Guard", and one field competition called Quad State.

"Schools from the surrounding area come and they all perform their marching band show," Swanson said. "We got best guard in our division at that competition, which meant a lot to us because it's out of quite a few schools. That was a big accomplishment for us."

Swanson credits the team's success to the good relationships between the girls on the team that allowed them to work well together and accomplish what was needed during practices.

"I got very lucky with the group of girls that I had because they were all very willing to work together," she said. "If something ever happened that offended one of them they would come to me and tell me. Then I would tell them as a group and that would fix it, which I was very lucky about because that does not happen with every group."

Swanson takes any chance she can to perform because of the adrenaline rush she gets every time she is about to step in front of an audience.

"I usually get terrified before performing anything," she said. "I do theater and acting and stuff too, but that's why I do it. I love that rush of adrenaline."

She has been a part of show choir since the sixth grade and says her facial expressions help her during the performances.

"I like to cheese out on stage which makes me kind of good for show choir because it's a lot of facials," she said. "I just have fun up there and it's a very fun activity."

As part of theater, Swanson says her favorite part is performing in front of an audience because of the reactions people have to the act, though she could do without the rehearsals. "Rehearsals get me down," she said. "I'm not a huge fan of rehearsing for the plays, but I do like the theater. I love performing."

As for her college career, Swanson hopes to continue with color guard at the University of Oregon next fall, where she will have to learn some new skills before arriving.

"Part of bigger guards is, they twirl rifles, not actual rifles, but little cut out rifle," she said. "We've never done that here just because we haven't had the coach for it, we haven't had the skills for it and we haven't had the equipment for it."

Since there is not an abundance of color guard coaches for hire, Swanson will have to learn the skills on her own time, hopefully with the help of a teammate and the internet.

"YouTube has quite a few guard routines too and if you want to put a lot of time into it, you can just learn off of YouTube," she said. "The internet is a great resource, I guess. It's harder from videos, but you got to do what you got to do."

Looking back at her time with the VHS color guard, Swanson recalls one moment in particular that stands out to her.

"I screwed up a lot on the field," she said. "Like, sophomore year we were doing a big bertha, which is way above your head and then you toss it way up, and I tossed it like five yards down. There is nothing you can do at that point, but I just ran after it and I smiled a lot and I laughed afterwards and that's all you really can do. That was one of my largest mistakes but also one of my favorite memories."

Congratulations Natalie on being named Tanager of the Week.

USD Over CSUN 76-72 For First Win Of Season

DEKALB, Ill.—South Dakota senor Eric Robertson scored six of his career-high 16 points in the final three minutes to lead the Coyotes to a 76-72 win against CSUN on the final day of the Northern Illinois Showcase at The Convocation Center.

Both teams finished their opening weekend with a 1-2 record. The Coyotes beat the Matadors for the third consecutive season with margins of one, three and now four points.

Robertson was 6 of 9 from the field and 4 of 4 from the free-throw line. His jumper tied the game at 68-68 with 2:57 remaining. He gave the Coyotes the lead for good with a layup on the next possession and made two free throws with 14 seconds remaining to give South Dakota a 74-69 advantage.

Coyote point guard Shy McClelland iced the game with two free throws with 7.5 seconds left. He had a season-high 11 points to go with four assists. Tre Burnette and Casey Kasperbauer added 13 points apiece. Freshman Jason Richardson scored 20 of his season-high 22 points in the second half to lead CSUN. He made four 3-pointers in the final half and handed out a game-high seven assists. Micheal Warren had 11 points and the Matadors got 10 each from Tre Hale-Edmerson and Tavrion Dawson. Robertson and freshman Tyler Hagedorn scored eight points each to help the Coyotes take a 33-30 lead into halftime. No lead was greater than four in the opening stanza. Burnette, South Dakota's leading scorer through two games, played just four minutes of the first half due to two fouls in the game's first six minutes.

As they had in the first two games, the Coyotes built a lead of nine points early in the second half only to give it all back. Hale-Edmerson scored four points during a 13-4 run that put CSUN ahead 52-51 with nine minutes to go.

Kasperbauer and Burnette answered with back-to-back 3's to put the Coyotes ahead 57-54 with 8:20 remaining. Those two combined to make 17 of South Dakota's 25 3-pointers during the Showcase. Kasperbauer was 11 of 24 from beyond the arc in the three games and stands with 197 career triples.

Richardson's third 3-pointer of the half gave CSUN a on to win 31-21, but Vermillion was proud to appear in the first championship game played right in their own backyards.

"We had lost four of our first six games to start the season and needed to win the last three regular season games in order to qualify for the playoffs," Culver said. "Only eight teams from each class qualified that first season of the playoffs, but we got hot and won all three games."

This season celebrated the 35th year of South Dakota high school football playoffs, and though the Tanagers were not present on the field, the city of Vermillion has played host to the championship game since its inception.

The Dakota Dome at the University of South Dakota sees seven high school games over the course of four days every November to crown champions in each class. Vermillion High School managed the playoffs from 1981 until about 2008 when the University of South Dakota took over.

"Regardless of who managed, it takes the entire community to support and carry out all the logistics of the playoffs," Culver said.

The Tanagers have also seen its fair share of titles with five state championships since the high school football playoffs were established, all five coming under the direction of Culver.

"I always have said that Vermillion football was very good before I arrived," Culver said. "I just kind of jumped on the bandwagon and was blessed with some very good athletes for the first few years there and we continued that success."

The Tanagers were the first team in Class 11A to capture three state titles in a row from 1990-1992, including a 20-6 win over Winner in 1990.

"Of course, this was our opponent in the 1981 championship so it had special meaning for out coaching staff as well as former players and community members," Culver said. "We won the game in 20-6 in a tough, hard fought contest. It was a special night for our team, school and community."

Vermillion continued the run into 67-66 lead with 4:29 left. He also hit a 3 with 12 seconds left that made it 74-72 with 12 seconds left ahead of McClelland's free throws.

South Dakota next competes at 7 p.m. Friday against Kansas State in Manhattan, Kan.

the next year and the 1991 team even broke a school record that still stands today. Vermillion's offense average 301.3 rushing yards per game from the two running backs Jason Leber, who ran for 2,122 season yards, and Stuart Rothschadl, who rushed for 1,032.

"This was almost unprecedented to have two running backs rush for this type of yardage on one team," Culver said.

After losing 15 starters from the 1991 championship team, the Tanagers managed to pull off the three-peat and defeated Winner, again, by a score of 46-27 in 1992.

Vermillion capped off the 90's with another two championships in 1995 and 1999 for total of five titles in ten years and proclaiming the Tanagers "Team of the Decade" for the 90's. Both the '95 and '99 teams went undefeated during the seasons.

The 1995 defense set another school record by allowing only 3.8 points per game, a record that may stand for a while, according to Culver.

"(1995) was undoubtedly the best defensive team I ever had the opportunity to coach during my tenure at Vermillion High School," culver said. "They only gave up seven touchdowns the entire season and probably would not have given up a point if we had desired to keep the starters in an entire game."

Even before the playoff system was implemented, Vermillion football had some more than successful seasons under coaches like Ronnie Brown (1957-61, 1966-73), Steve Swisher (1974-75) and Steve Atkins (1944-56).

"The 60's and the 50's were great football records that Vermillion had so it was kind in place before I arrived," Culver said. "The history and the rich tradition and if you look down the roster of coaches that coached here, Steve Swisher, Ronnie Brown, Steve Atkins, those are all hall of fame coaches. So, it was a coaching hotbed even before I arrived."

According to Culver, the offenses and defenses have seen some shifting throughout the years, but always come full circle to show similarities from past years.

"It's kind of always been an involvement through the ages of different offenses and defenses," Culver said. "They kind of come into vogue, sort of speak, and popular and then everybody is kind of a copycat this business of football coaching."

Today, teams use more of a spread offense where the players are spread across the field and throw the ball more often, which according to Culver, is different from just a few years ago when he was coaching.

"It was more power oriented and more slugfest type of thing in the trenches," he said. "Its changed in that aspect and it's neat to see that evolvement, so it's kind of one of those 'what goes around comes around.' You see it kind of changing back a little bit or people getting things from the dark ages, sort of speak, and throwing them into the mix of the new game with this spread offense."

He says there is also in defensive formations where more teams are playing with a four-man or three-man front. Teams are accomplishing the same as a five-man front, just lining up differently for it.

"It's a game that's evolved and yet it goes back in the past and picks up things and applies them to things that they're doing now," Culver said.

After Culver's 35-year tenure as head coach ended in 2012, the Tanagers have been in a bit of a lull in terms of wins and losses. This season the team went 1-8 with the only win coming from a 36-34 overtime win against Dakota Valley.

The variety of sports offered at the high school, combined with the small student body, have caused athletes to have more options for activities, meaning the football team is seeing smaller numbers than in years past. With a sport like football, numbers are important.

"Football is a little bit of a numbers game, you need depth because of injuries that occur and you need people to be able to rest a little bit and have people come in," Culver said.

In 2008, Vermillion began a youth football program for grades 3-8 that Culver hopes will spark interest in the younger athletes to continue playing football into the high school years.

"I think the future looks bright here," Culver said. "Sometimes it's a long slow process and fans aren't always patient or kind sometimes, but that's the nature of the game and that's the nature of the coaching business."
