SD will not build health insurance exchange

Gov. Dennis Daugaard announced today that the state of South Dakota will not operate a state health insurance exchange but will maintain control of insurance regulation in South Dakota.

Unless the federal health care law is repealed, a health insurance exchange must be operated in every state by 2014. The federal government will directly operate and fund exchanges in those states choosing not to operate state-run exchanges. South Dakota joins other states that have chosen not to run their own exchanges.

A cost analysis completed by an independent company found annual operating costs of such a state exchange would range from $6.3 million to $7.7 million, or $2 to $3 per person, per month.

Daugaard added: "I oppose the federal health care law because it is a large expansion of government that does little about the rising cost of health care. My first hope is that the next president and Congress will repeal this ill-advised law. In the absence of that, our state must work to ensure that even as the federal government implements this law, the state retains control over the regulation of health insurance. I believe South Dakotans want our own citizens doing the regulation. We do not want to cede control of that to the federal government."
