

Local artist to grace library

By Sarah Wetzel

On Wednesday, the Vermillion library will welcome local visual artist Michele Mechling as part of an author/artist series aimed at providing something interesting for everyone.

"It has been a pretty popular series so we decided to keep doing it," said Susan Heggstead, Adult Programming Coordinator at the library.

The event is free and open to the public.

Heggstead mentioned that the only thing participants need to bring is an interest in learning from a master.

"There aren't very many people in town who can do it as well as she does," Heggstead said. "I've always wanted to learn from her. She's going to talk about her work on Wednesday night and a workshop on Saturday of that week [from 2-4 pm]. The lecture you just come and listen and join in the discussion. But Saturday is all about learning some of the technique she uses. If people want to they can bring a photograph of the landscape they want to do."

According to Mechling, this type of event is what art is all about.

"For me art making isn't just staying home in your studio and creating pieces for yourself," she said. "I enjoy going out and sharing what I've learned with other people no matter what age they are and giving them the tools to be able to express themselves in the way I do."

The ability to create art, according to Mechling, is not just for a select few contrary to popular belief.

"Most people at some point in their lives think they can't do that," she said. "But really everybody has some sort of ability that can be very therapeutic in their lives. It's just a really cool piece that I think people don't realize they have."

While the library offers a wide range of speakers on various topics, this particular series focuses on the arts.

"I try to help educate people," Heggstead said. "We often have a pretty limited view of what art is."

According to Heggstead, the library is determined to do its part to help the community by featuring locals in the series.

"Mostly I'm really interested in highlighting all the creative people in the area," she said. "There will probably be years before I run out."

Mechling, the artist to be featured on Oct. 1, is a local through and through. She graduated from the University of South Dakota with a visual arts degree and for the next 20 years, ran the Coffee Shop Gallery.

"She combined her love of hosting people, making coffee, feeding people and her love of art," Heggstead said. "She supported her passion for art by showcasing other people's artwork on her walls. She helped a lot of artists get connected in the community and sell their art."

Mechling herself said she and her husband had a great time doing this.

"We had over 100 artists exhibited over the years in the coffee shop," she said.

"Lots of students and professional artists. It was just a wonderful alternative gallery space. I do enjoy helping others in many ways especially fellow artists. It's one of my passions."

The Coffee Shop Gallery closed in 2010 when Cafe Brule took its place.

Besides being an artist, Mechling currently works as a bookkeeper for Sharing the Dream, a nonprofit organization that sells hand-made products from Guatemala. You can find this store in downtown Vermillion.

4-Hers focus on diversity, invite others to join

Clay County 4-H will be in full swing once again as groups meet and devise plans for the upcoming year. Oct. 1 is when 4-H groups begin their new year.

The Wakonda group, the Young Producers, met on Sunday to discuss their action plan for the approaching year. This particular group of 12 youths ranges from ages 8-18.

"The next big thing in October is to walk around Wakonda and pick up trash," Andy Jensen, leader of the Young Producers said. "We will also be offering to help any elderly people who would like their leaves raked this fall." He added.

Jensen is leading the group this year after retiring from a different 4-H position for the county. He is very passionate about 4-H and is enjoying working at the local level. The Young Producers group agreed in their meeting that this year they would like to focus more on community involvement.

"As a group they decided to work more towards community involvement, more community service" Jensen said.

While the kids involved in Young Producers group happen to be involved primarily in livestock and horse oriented projects, they want others to know that 4-H isn't just about farming, or for farm families.

"We also do a lot of other projects so there is something for everyone, such as crafting, photography, and robotics," Jensen added.

"Anyone can join. We can take kids from 5-7 years old as clover buds, and then 8-18 year olds as 4-H'ers," Jensen said.

And just because the Young Producers are focused on the Wakonda area doesn't mean they aren't willing to accept kids from other communities as well.

"We encourage them to join from anywhere: Irene, Centerville and Vermillion kids are all welcome. You don't have to be from Wakonda," Jensen said.

Raven Jensen, 14, had encouraging words for those interested in joining "In 4-H, they are not just individual members; they grow together as a group."

Andy Jensen added that 4-H helps kids build life skills and positive attitudes.

The Wakonda Young Producers will continue to invite others to join their group. Jensen added "Our main hurdle is to educate the community that 4-H is not just about agriculture any more. While it's a good platform for agriculture, kids interested in anything can join."

University. They have written papers. It's very fascinating. We had it cleaned and it's beautiful, you can see the details now," Aakre detailed.

The Schuelke Organ came in May of 1888 and is what is known as a tracker organ. It was built in Wisconsin and arrived 16 feet high, 12 feet wide and 10 and 1/2 feet deep. "They have had recitals here" Aakre said.

The Organ at Trinity Lutheran Church also has a unique history, according to Christy Kimball, Director of Music.

"It's very old. It originally went to Yankton on the wagon train in the 1800's, and then was shipped back down to Vermillion on the river," Kimball said. "It doesn't have many markings, so some of the history is a mystery."

Kimball knows quite a bit about the organ, as a 2003 graduate of USD with a Master's in Organ Performance, she has done her fair share of research. "The first organs were water powered." She elaborated. Kimball has been playing the worship; it sets the tone for the type of service." She said.

Spencer Smith, a Hermosa, South Dakota native, started playing the piano when he was six and eventually added the organ to his repertoire. Smith added to the sentiment of the organ's importance to worship. "It adds another perspective to worship, helps them [the congregation] voice their part of worship."

Smith is starting his second year playing the organ at the United Church of Christ. He is a Piano Performance Major at USD. "This organ was built in 1928, and it's very big" he added.

The organ is a unique instrument, and according to Larson, it is because of its diversity.

"There are a lot of different sounds you can get with the organ. Medal pipes and wood pipes have different sounds, you have reed sounds and trumpet sounds," Larson said.

Larson has been playing organ for church services since he was a freshman in high school.

"You have the opportunity to play with a whole orchestra, so to speak, when you play the organ," Larson said.

Kimball had a similar sentiment "The organ is a stunning instrument. You have myriads of pipes to make myriads of sounds. It's like an orchestra. Every organ is different; it's just a gas to play them." Kimball said.

These large instruments do take some upkeep in order to keep them working properly.

"We do maintenance twice a year" Kimball said of the Trinity Lutheran Church organ.

Pastor Aakre emphasized that there are people who come from all over the United States to clean and maintenance the First Baptist Church organ.

"They're a knowledgeable group of guys," he said "they have to know what they're doing."

Spencer Smith said that the United Church of Christ has some maintenance scheduled as well. "It will be really interesting to see and hear," Spencer said. "They are going to work on the pipes and the wind chests."

Organists and their organs contribute to the experience of worship, but playing the organ can also have an impact on those playing the organ as well.

"In playing the organ for church services, I am able to connect better with the service" Larson said.

With talented organists, the organ will continue to be a part of local worship. "It's just a beautiful instrument to play," Kimball said.
